

I like to use the incremental model so that the components could be built in parts and so that there is continuous feedback. As there are just 4 components these may well overlap and being adaptive to each of them. This will be delivered early and gain feedback from this increment to improve the other 3 components. The company then could benefit first by having this component delivered first and define future incremental components.

|